

An Editorial Note

After three years of pleasure and extensive further education I come to the end of my term as Editor of ARIEL. I should like to thank all the contributors (both published and unpublished), who have taught me a great deal about the state of English literature around the world. Grateful thanks also are due to the Poetry Editor Christopher Wiseman, the Guest Editors, the unfailingly supportive Editorial Board, my colleagues in the University of Calgary's English Department, and the University itself.

Ian Adam, my successor as Editor, will take ARIEL into its second decade and my best wishes go to him as well as to all our readers.

James Black

