

Notes on Contributors

Anthony Bradley is a course Professor of English at the University of Vermont, where he teaches courses in Modern British and Irish literature. He is the editor of Contemporary Irish Poetry (University of California Press, 2nd ed. 1988), and co-editor of Gender and Sexuality in Modern Ireland (University of Massachusetts Press, 1997). His recent article, “Fumbling in an Greasy Till: Nation and Class in Yeats’s Responsibilities,” was published in the Irish University Review, Autumn/Winter 2000.

Cyril Dabydeen has published more than a dozen books of prose and poetry, including Dark Swirl, Brahmin Days, Black Jesus and Other Stories and Jogging in Havana. He lives in Ottawa, Canada.

Charmaine Eddy is a Professor of English at Trent University. Her current research interests include Modern and contemporary American Fiction; African-American fiction; nineteenth-century women poets; black literary and critical theory; theories of subjectivity and the body; William Faulkner and Toni Morrison.

Gaik Cheng Khoo, a sessional instructor, currently teaches Southeast Asian literature and culture at the University of Victoria. Her doctoral thesis focused on gender, modernity and the nation in Malaysian literature and film of the 1980s and 1990s.

Brenda Garrett is currently working on her PhD in the Department of English at the University of Alberta.

Robbie B. H. Goh is associate professor and deputy head in the Department of English Language and Literature at National University of Singapore. He publishes mainly in postcolonial and Asian studies, as well as nineteenth-century English literature. Recent publications include Postcolonial Cultures and Literatures (co-edited), and articles in Social Semiotics, Urban Studies and Journal of Narrative Theory.

Farhad B. Idris is an Assistant Professor of English at Frostburg State University in Maryland. His areas of teaching and research currently include postcolonial literature, Modern British literature, Modern American poetry and English composition.

Sukeshi Kamra is an assistant professor in the English Department at Carleton University. She has recently published a book entitled Bearing Witness: Partition, Independence, End of the Raj (University of Calgary Press, 2002) and has written articles on Salman Rushdie, Rohinton Mistry and Partition Literature.

Shannon MacRea is a doctoral student in English at the University of Toronto and a junior fellow at Massey College. She is currently completing her dissertation which will focus on representations of Christianity in Canadian literature and is pursuing research related to pathography and the narratives of wellness.

Nivedita Majumdar is an assistant professor of English at the City University of New York. Her research interests include postcolonial literature and cultural theory. She is currently working on a book manuscript, The Nation and Its Discontents: Critiques of Nationalism in South Asian Literature. Dr. Majumdar's writings have appeared in several scholarly journals including Indian Literature, Doris Lessing Studies and Journal of Indo-Canadian Studies. She can be reached at nmajumdar@citytech.cuny.edu

Stephen Morton is a lecturer in Anglophone literature at the University of Southampton. His research interests include Anglophone literatures from Canada, South Asia and Caribbean, postcolonial theory, critical theory, poetics and politics, visual culture and globalization. He has published articles and reviews on postcolonial literature and theory, critical and cultural theory, visual culture, and recent Canadian writing. He is the author of Gayatri Chakravorty Spivak (2002) in the Routledge Critical Thinkers series.

Helga Ramsey-Kurz, assistant professor in the English Department at the University of Innsbruck, Austria, has written on female/female hostility in contemporary British women's fiction, as well as on migration and (inter)national and cultural identities in postcolonial fiction. With the support of the Austrian Science Fund's Charlotte-Bühler_Habilitation-Grant she is currently working on representations of illiteracy in twentieth-century Anglophone novels.

Chitra Sankaran is Assistant Professor of English and University Scholars Program at the University of Singapore. Her current teaching and research interests include feminist theory, feminist discourse and Singapore literature.

E. Kim Stone is assistant professor at Illinois State University where she teaches twentieth-century British postcolonial studies and women's studies. Her research has appeared Journal of Commonwealth Literature, Camera Obscura and Thresholds.

Mathews Varkey is a postgraduate in Mathematics. He works for a telecommunications company in Kerala, India.

Tobias A. Wachinger completed his dissertation in English Literature Sciences at Ludwig Maximilians University in Munich. Wachinger's present work is engaged with postcolonial studies, hybridity and British Literature.

Wang Ning is a Professor in the Department of Foreign Languages at Tsinghua University. His major areas of research are concerned with modern and postmodern Western critical theories, Anglo-American literature, comparative literature and cultural studies, translation and media studies and sinological studies.